

Mayor takes the lead on COVID vaccination – what a week!

More than 400 Palm Islanders did the best thing they could do to take the strongest possible stand against COVID-19 last week – they rolled up their sleeves and took their first vaccination.

Mayor Mislam Sam was the first in a line out of 444 people to be vaccinated at the COVID clinic last Monday, leading the successful community campaign against the disease. The vaccination team will be back in early June for second jabs and, they hope, more first jabs.

“Well done Palm Islander people in making a stand for a healthier community,” Townsville Public Health Unit Director Dr Steven Donohue said.

“About 21 percent of the eligible group for the vaccine, which is now 16 years and older, have been vaccinated.”

He said he was keen to remind the community again why it was important to be jabbed.

“Healthy people can still transmit the virus to others and COVID is a severe illness for people who have diabetes or heart disease and kidney disease,” he said.

“It is important for everyone to be vaccinated to reduce community transmission.

“People want to be able to visit family and friends in other towns without the worry of getting the virus and bringing it back to Palm Island.

“We are asking people to do it for themselves, their family and their community.”

There will be Palm Island clinics held again from Monday 7 June to Friday 11 June and again from Tuesday 6 July to Friday 9 July.

Happy Birthday Father Manh!

A day (off) to remember ... united we stand
Palm Island will enjoy a public holiday on Friday 28 May, to commemorate the 1957 Palm Island Strike.

The Strike of 1957 was a time the people of Palm Island met in silence and unity to fight for better wages and living conditions for all.

As a result of these meetings seven men from seven families were branded as leaders and troublemakers.

While they may have all passed on now, Willie Thaiday, Albert Geia, Eric Lymburner, Sonny Sibley, Bill Congoo, George Watson and Gordon Tapau will not be forgotten.

These men and their families were rounded up by police in the early hours of the morning, forcibly removed from their homes and banished from the Island.

Most of them were not to return until decades later.

“We should all stop and remember that day back in 1957 when these seven men and Palm Island people stood up for their rights and said no more to the Government people who controlled their life,” family member Evelyn Lymburner told the Palm Island Voice in 2011.

“This was the time when our parents and grandparents were living under ‘The Act’, living as slaves and living by the bell to wake up for work and down for sleep at night.

“They had no say in what they can do or where they can go.

“They could not meet in crowds, segregation and boundaries, children were separated from families and put into dormitories.

“All were from different tribal backgrounds, and were taught and told to speak English and not their own traditional language.

“We have this freedom now to choose our own path in life.

“To acknowledge this day every year is our way of healing and helping the reconciliation process between all races of people.

“We are proud Bwngcolman people of Palm Island.”

Memories are made of learning

Students who visited Palm Island last month from the University of Sydney's Service Learning in Indigenous Communities (SLIC) program have taken home some great memories of their time here host Valentine Nona says.

"SLIC students have been working with Tribal Warrior and their partners to document the planning and preparation for the upcoming Palm Island Maritime Project, made possible because of an enduring partnership between Tribal Warrior Aboriginal Corporation and the Palm Island community," he said.

He said Tribal Warrior was a key partner to the Deputy Vice Chancellor's Indigenous Strategy and Services Portfolio at the University of Sydney, whose SLIC program sponsors helped to make the visit possible along with Palm Island partner Jina Gunduy Ltd.

"Having students experience Palm Island, meeting and getting to know people here and knowing that they went away with a better understanding of our community was important for me," he said.

"There were so many highlights – Aunty Florence Izzard gave them some wise advice about the things that really matter in life, they met Dr Lynore Geia and learned why it's so important for the Palm Island community to lead local projects, they took a day trip to Orpheus with Uncle Alf Clay and Tribal Warrior trained coxswain Charlie Gibson, they shared a Kup Murri with the community, they met with the Palm Island Mayor and Councillors and they heard what representatives of other Palm Island organisations had to say about Tribal Warrior's maritime training."
